This photo was taken at Harte. The engine is crossing a short trestle (over Halls Gulch) while the switchstand a couple of car-lengths in front of the photographer is for the Harte siding. At one time, there was a flume alongside the tracks here (on the river side) but it was washed out in the 1937 flood or removed earlier. The background matches a Google Earth view from the same location. This is the westbound May 1945 fan trip.
